

31st European Veterinary Dental Forum

Sponsorship information and Sponsor packages
La Cité Nantes Congress Centre, Nantes, France
30 May – 1 June 2024

European Veterinary Dental Society

The annual European Veterinary Dental Forum (the "Forum") is organised by the European Veterinary Dental Society (EVDS) in co-operation with the European Veterinary Dental College (EVDC). The Forum, which is the responsibility of the EVDS, is a two-day event with a related commercial exhibition. The EVDC takes care of the pre-Congress training days.

The European Veterinary Dental Society (EVDS) is a non-profit organisation founded in 1992. The objectives of the EVDS are:

- Providing continuous education for veterinarians
- Promoting clinical research in order to improve general health for animals.

The EVDS's annual meeting takes place in a different country each year and includes a varied scientific program along with a social program and entertainment. It is a two-day meeting preceded by a practical study day run by the European Veterinary Dental College (EVDC). The EVDC is also a non-profit educational organisation. Their objectives include the advancement of veterinary dentistry through postgraduate teaching and certification of European veterinary specialists in dentistry.

The city of Nantes

Nantes is the eighth largest city in France, with a population of over 600,000 in the urban area. The historic part of the city stands on the north bank of the Loire, around the confluence of the river Erdre. The meeting of the two rivers is not however a feature, as back in the 1930s the lower end of the Erdre was filled in to make more room in the city centre, and the river now flows out into the Loire via a canal tunnel.

Apart from its medieval / Renaissance castle, which now houses the city's museum, and the late medieval cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul, the historic centre of Nantes is largely characterised by streets and buildings that were put up in the period of the city's commercial heyday, from the late 17th century to the early 19th century. This helps to give Nantes a slight Parisian feeling - like a small version of Paris in the west of France.

The once busy port area of Nantes is now very quiet; the little commercial shipping that still comes up the Loire as far as Nantes uses wharves on the south side of the Loire or on the western outskirts of the city, and the few cruise liners that make it up the Loire estuary have to dock well away from the centre. The Quai de la Fosse, closest to the city centre, has no commercial shipping, but is served by pleasure craft and is home to some historic ships, including the Maillé-Brézé, a historic warship and naval museum.

Today, more than a port, Nantes is the administrative and commercial hub of north-western France. The city that was until the 16th century the capital of Brittany is now no longer part of Brittany; the department of Loire Atlantique, of which it is the capital, was definitively hived off from Brittany under the Vichy government during the second world war, and has since become the capital of a new administrative region - with little historic basis - the Pays de la Loire, created in 1963. In that respect, Nantes remains a regional capital, but no longer the capital of Brittany. That is now Rennes.

Nantes welcomes and trains over 3,700 international students. Its 200 laboratories and 2,200 researchers in health and biotechnologies are ranked among the best. The nine industrial competitiveness clusters in Nantes Métropole – aerospace, shipbuilding, energy and transport, imaging, health and biotechnologies, the maritime industry, etc. – have international reach.

Gala Dinner

Friday 31 May

19.00-00.00

Les Machines de l'Île
Parc des Chantiers
Boulevard Léon Bureau
44 200 Nantes

LES MACHINES DE L'ÎLE DE NANTES

"Les Machines de l'Île" is a totally unprecedented artistic project. Situated on the exceptional site of the former shipyards and created thanks to François Delarozière and Pierre Orefice's imaginations, it is at the crossroads between Jules Verne's "invented worlds", the mechanical universe of Leonardo da Vinci, and Nantes' industrial history.

The "Galerie des Machines" houses a laboratory and a whole bestiary of machines. During your visit, the machinists will explain the history and workings of these strange creatures and put life into the imaginary world of the Heron Tree, future project of the Machines de l'Île.

The evening starts at 19.00 and will last until midnight. It will start with a Discovery of the Galerie des machines, followed by a seated dinner and dance party.

How to reach Les Machines de l'île

By tramway

- Tramway ligne 1 : arrêt "Chantiers Navals". When leaving the tram, cross the bridge and walk straight ahead
- More info: www.tan.fr

By bike

- Station Bicloo n° 43 : Machines de l'île
- More info: www.bicloo.nantesmetropole.fr

Car parks

- Pay parking lot Les Machines
- Paying place on Bd de la Prairie au Duc
- Free parking lot: Quai Wilson

Farewell Drink
